

>The Mysticism of Insurrection

Fictions constantly inject themselves into our daily reality out of the primordial soup that they come from. This magma of potential that they form in can be picked apart, chosen, dissected, revolted against, exercised, multiplied, and programmed. These fictions arise out of the womb of chance and opportunity. At any moment, an infinite amount of contingent possibilities of an infinite number of symbols, phrases, and references can be molded out of this ether into the unknown present.

The question is then; what dominant fiction do we want to choose and propagate? What retro-virus of meaning from the future do we want to summon into our reality?

Symbols are zones of constant struggles for dominance. They can be hidden within popular names or images for use by those who know, or loudly exerted as the call signs of fascists for everyone to see. Either way, no symbol is ever definitively decided. Symbolism is a battleground.

How do we navigate this warzone of future-dominant infections of meaning? What use and what waste does fighting this battle entail, and what jouissance can be found in the struggle against reality? How can we utilize the tools from the future to influence the present? These symbols and their future meaning can be used to change the present. By grasping towards the future to retroactively convert the current day struggle into something else, we break loose from what binds and limits us today.

Fiction propagates us into the future. Marxist ideological framings of the enemy, faux-historical symbols of a lost past of Ancient Rome, group-creating slogans of resistance, and so on. All of these technologies are symbols that alter the present and create themselves into the future. Navigating and harnessing these occult technologies of the unknown future can reassign our present and its power structures into a future where they belong - into one of decay. It is up to you to choose and fight for the symbolic warzones towards an insurrectionary freedom, without fear of what current power dominates the fight in any given symbol. Symbolism is a battleground.